On the last afternoon of the trip we had a long, narrow valley and high rounded hills to the north. A few more miles to the left, however, the valley opens out and the hills are not so high and rounded. They may be low in the west and high in the east, but the ground is very uneven and hills and ridges are scattered here and there by small fields of cultivation.

At 8 A.M. the party started for the valley. We took the road through the valley, and soon came to a small settlement, composed of about 100 houses.
This had a population, I think, of 500 or more.
A few houses were built of adobe or mud with stones of pebbles, the rest of adobe with a thatched roof. The people here are not so poor as they were but are not so well off either. We passed through all the houses, but found very little of value and nothing of value.

The men say there has been nothing of value found for a long time.
There is no money here.
